

Ryan Sandefur

AP-Photo 2015

Note

- This is an AP portfolio and Ryan's breadth is not shown here as it is not necessary at this juncture. He scored a 4 on his AP portfolio (5 is the highest score you can receive on an AP exam, so this is a very good portfolio)

Concentration

Statement

- In the world, material objects such as a watch often do not last very long, People will often throw them away and just buy a new one. The things that are old and worn and have been used a long time, I think are sometimes the most interesting, they tell a story. The old things can be refurbished and enhanced and used for other purposes such as art. Everyday objects that people think are nothing special can be altered and changed into a piece of art that is eye-catching and extraordinary.
- The most fun part for me is deciding how to enhance the object and make it more interesting and more appealing. As can be seen in my concentration, almost all of my images are modified in some form or another. All of my photographs are taken at Newbury Park High School because I wanted to challenge myself to see what I could find. I wanted to find things that most people walking around campus either miss or look at and think that this needs to be repaired or fixed in some way. I wanted people to see the uniqueness in everyday objects and see that enhancing old or deteriorating items offers a new perspective to art.
