

Written Evidence

The way I perceive photography is to capture things from different perspectives that you can't see through the naked eye. I photograph mountains and landscapes using lighting to create different moods in the photos. Using diffused lighting to add an atmosphere to my photos, I try to express how gorgeous of a world we live in. I live in Newbury Park where I am surrounded by mountains, valleys, and overall nature. Photography has allowed me to capture places I grew up around and really get to show just how beautiful my home really is. Using my drone makes it possible to capture everyday mountains and landscapes I see and reveal a different side and perspective that I've never seen before. For example, photo 7 is Mount Boney, a well-known mountain where I live, which overlooks my home. I could capture and view it at eye level, which revealed a new angle of it I'd never seen before. Another example is photo 1. It shows an old oak tree with fog surrounding it. Oak trees grow everywhere in my area, and seeing them so often can make me forget about them. So I singled out one to really characterize it and pop out, which reminds me how beautiful these trees are.
